These maps are drawn from the same perspective as a vertical aerial photograph (i.e. looking directly down on the area). Sketch maps are generally not drawn to scale. A scale is a ratio used to show how a dimension on a map corresponds with the dimension it represents in the real world. Sketch maps range from maps of rail networks to floor-plan guide maps of museums. They even include hand-drawn sketches, which show the way to a friend's house, for example.
